CAMPBELL COUNTY GRAND JURY RETURNS FELONY INDICTMENTS AGAINST FORMER OFFICER ISAIAH LLOYD

Isaiah Lloyd Faces Charges of Official Misconduct and Coercing/Influencing A Witness

CAMPBELL COUNTY, Tenn. [April 15, 2026] – A Campbell County Grand Jury in the State of Tennessee has returned an indictment against former LaFollette Police Officer, Isaiah Lloyd. The indictment charges the defendant with Official Misconduct and Coercing/Influencing a Witness.

The indictment alleges that while employed by the LaFollette Police Department, Lloyd went to a residence in Campbell County on January 29, 2024, where he vandalized property. When confronted by one of the homeowners, the defendant threw an explosive device at said homeowner before fleeing the scene.

The charge of Official Misconduct stems from the defendant's actions on January 29, 2024. Official Misconduct has a statute of limitations of two (2) years, meaning that it must be charged within two (2) years of the offense date. However, statute of limitations can be tolled under certain circumstances. Here, the indictment alleges that numerous acts by the defendant tolled the statute of limitations for official misconduct, allowing the charge to be brought.

As to the Coercing/Influencing of a Witness charge, the indictment alleges that Isaiah Lloyd influenced a witness to withhold truthful information relating to the investigation and prosecution of an offense occurring on January 23, 2025, in Campbell County, Tennessee.

District Attorney General Jared Effler stated: "I appreciate the thorough and methodical investigation by the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation that has brought this case to the point of being formally charged. My office acknowledges the challenge this case presents by bringing one of the charges outside of the statute of limitations. However, we are prepared to work hard to meet that challenge and to seek justice and accountability in this matter."

Following the indictment in this matter, Campbell County Criminal Court Judge Zachary R. Walden issued a capias for the arrest of Isaiah Lloyd and ordered him held in the Campbell County Jail in lieu of a $25,000 secured bond. The defendant's initial appearance in the Campbell County Criminal Court is scheduled for Monday, May 4, 2026.

This is a pending criminal investigation, and this will be the only comment made by the District Attorney General's Office of the 8th Judicial District.

An indictment is merely an allegation of criminal conduct and not evidence of guilt. All allegations in an indictment must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt at trial.
